Reluctant Readers

At Our House by Isabel Minhos Martins

A lively and colourful picture book which asks the reader to count all the things to do with the people in the author's house. This includes the toes, intestines, finger, freckles and more startling and gross number crunching which will appeal to seven-year-old readers – particularly those reluctant to start chapter books.

StoryWorlds: A Moment in Time: A Perpetual Picture Atlas by Thomas Hegbrook

A picture book with few words, this book will appeal to imaginative but reluctant readers. This book explores one single moment in time across many strikingly different locations and situations so the reader can compare what is happening in the world all at the same time. The book folds out to allow a child to read any part without having to start at the beginning or reach the end.
